GE15 to add fuel to the recovery fire

Maintain POSITIVE and BUYs on MAHB and CAPITALA

With Prime Minister Ismail Sabri Yaakob having dissolved Parliament on 10 Oct 2022, the 15th General Election (GE15) will have to be held within 60 days. Taking a leaf out of history, we expect GE15 to have a long term positive impact on passenger traffic and a short term positive impact on airfares. To be more specific, we expect GE15 to favour CAPITALA more than MAHB. We maintain our estimates and TPs for MAHB and CAPITALA. Maintain POSITIVE view on the Malaysian aviation sector.

Passenger traffic tends to rise during GEs...

History has taught us that passenger traffic tends to rise during GEs as voters return to their voting constituencies to vote. This is especially true for voters whose voting constituencies are across the South China Sea in Sabah and Sarawak. For MAHB, domestic passenger traffic grew 18% in 2013 (GE13) and 3% in 2018 (GE14) (Fig. 1 & 2). For CAPITALA, AirAsia Malaysia passenger (MAA) traffic grew 11% in both 2013 (GE13) and 2018 (GE14) (Fig. 3 & 4). We expect GE15 to exhibit similar trends. What intrigues us further is that the rise in passenger traffic in the past appears to be structural. In other words, passenger traffic does not ease post-GEs but stabilizes or even continue growing.

... but GE15's impact may be a little less potent

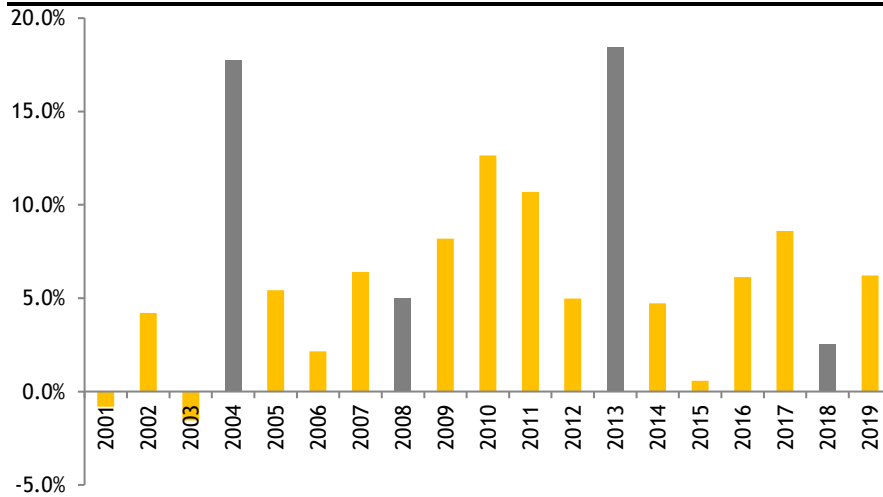

There was also growth in airfares during GEs but they did not last long (Fig. 5). To be sure, we gather that GE15's impact on the Malaysian aviation sector may be less potent this time around. One, voter turnout may not be as high as GE13 (80%) and GE14 (76%). At press time, Pakatan Harapan is still deciding whether to dissolve the state assemblies of Penang and Negeri Sembilan after deciding not to dissolve the state assembly of Selangor while Islamic party PAS stated that it will not dissolve the state assemblies of Kedah, Kelantan and Terengganu. Moreover, Sabah/Sarawak already held their state elections in Sep 2020/Dec 2021 respectively. Two, voters may be dissuaded from flying to their voting constituencies due to currently high airfares (Fig. 6).

GE15 may favour CAPITALA more than MAHB

To be sure, we expect both MAHB and CAPITALA to benefit from GE15. That said, we expect CAPITALA to benefit more than MAHB. This is because CAPITALA's fares per stage length (i.e. fare/km flown) are largely stable regardless of distance. That said, the passengers services charges (PSC) levied by MAHB on passengers travelling through its Malaysian airports are markedly different for domestic (MYR8/MYR11) and international passengers (MYR40/MYR80). GEs tend to drive domestic passenger traffic which is lower yielding. Nonetheless, we maintain our CAPITALA and MAHB estimates which are premised on CAPITALA's FY22E MAA passenger traffic recovering to 50% of 2019A levels and MAHB's FY22E Malaysian domestic traffic recovering to 60% of 2019A levels.
