BI Hikes for First Time Since June, as Strong Dollar Weighs on Rupiah Despite Ramp Up in FX Hedging Incentives

Bank Indonesia hiked +25bps for the first time since June, bringing the policy rate to 6%. The deposit and lending facility interest rates were likewise raised by +25bps to 5.25% and 6.75% respectively. BI framed the surprise move as a step to stabilise the rupiah from the impact of rising global uncertainty and to keep inflation within the 1.5%-3.5% target range. BI's baseline forecast still expects inflation to be within its target over 2027 and 2028, with its policy rate hike a response to the potential risk of inflation overshooting, which has risen partly due to rupiah depreciation.

The past two weeks have been particularly challenging for the rupiah, with a step-up in global financial market volatility after hotter-than-expected US inflation in October (data released 10 Nov), which drove US treasury yields higher after the midterm elections. The US 10Y yield surged +30bps from the trough of 4.85% on 6 November.

The rupiah hit an all-time low of 18,273 prior to the decision, depreciating nearly -1% from end-Oct (-8.7% since start of year). The rupiah pressure stems from an appreciating DXY index amid increasingly hawkish Fed tightening bets, with the DXY rising +1.8% from end-October levels. Indonesia's 10Y GB yields hovered at an elevated 7.6%, slightly lower than the 7.7% peak in early November but higher than end-Sep (7.1%).

DNDF Hedging Incentives Raised +5% points, Sep Net Reserves Fall US$700mn MoM

Besides hiking the policy rate, domestic non-deliverable forward (DNDF) hedging incentives were increased further, from 40% to 45% for 6-month tenors and from 45% to 50% for 12-month tenors.

BI reported that the hedging incentive policies have attracted foreign capital inflows of US$14.1bn as of 17 Nov (vs. US$9.9bn a month earlier) since their implementation in June. Of this, about US$11.4bn stemmed from FX swap incentives and US$2.6bn from DNDFs. Overall capital flows in 4Q 2026 recorded a quarter-to-date net inflow of US$4.8bn as of 16 November stemming from bonds, despite equity market outflows of US$0.9bn.

Hedging incentives, high government bond yields as well as spot and forward FX intervention have nonetheless been insufficient to stem rupiah pressure, necessitating a stronger policy response from BI.

The leeway for FX intervention is narrowing. Gross FX reserves rose slightly to US$146.8bn in end October (vs. US$146.3bn in Sep), but net reserves (net of forward positions) have been dwindling at a faster pace. Latest available data shows net reserves declining to US$113.5bn as of end-Sep (Aug: US$114.2bn), falling US$19.8bn since January.

Resilient Domestic Outlook, High Credit Growth

BI said the global economic outlook remains weak whilst inflationary pressures remain high, accompanied by persistently high financial market uncertainty. It expects tight global monetary policy to continue for a longer period, with its baseline forecast for a +25bps Fed hike in December and a hold in 2027.

BI characterised domestic economic growth as resilient, maintaining its GDP forecast in the range of 4.9%-5.7% (Maybank forecast: +5.4%), primarily supported by domestic demand related to consumption and investment. Inflation remains within BI's target, with Oct headline inflation (3.2% vs. 3.3% in Sep) and core inflation (2.6% vs. 2.8% in Sep) both easing.

Credit growth came in at a robust +13.2% in October (vs. +13.3% in Sep), supported by investment credit (+21.3%). The maim driver of credit demand was loans related to government programs, which grew +20.8% year-on-year. Banking liquidity support was strengthened through cross currency repo transactions with BI, which enables banks to obtain rupiah funds with SVBI and SUVBI, with the policy taking effect by March 2027. This follows an RRR cut of -200bps announced in the October meeting (100bps starting 1 Nov and 100bps from 1 Dec).

Expect BI to Hold in December, Tighten +25bps in 2027

We continue to expect BI to hike its policy rate by +25bps in 2027, bringing the policy rate to a post-pandemic high of 6.25%. Today's policy rate hike could have been a pre-emptive move ahead of the Fed's December meeting, which markets are expecting a 97% probability of a +25bps FFT hike. Our base case is for BI to stand pat in December, although there remains risk of further BI tightening if the Fed proves more hawkish than markets expect.

For 2027, BI will continue to use a mix of targeted tools to support the rupiah, possibly with further DNDF premium reductions which are more likely than additional hedging swap discounts (as net profit or loss from onshore DNDFs can be settled in rupiah). BI will also deploy forward market interventions alongside spot FX reserves to stabilize the rupiah and limit reserve drain.

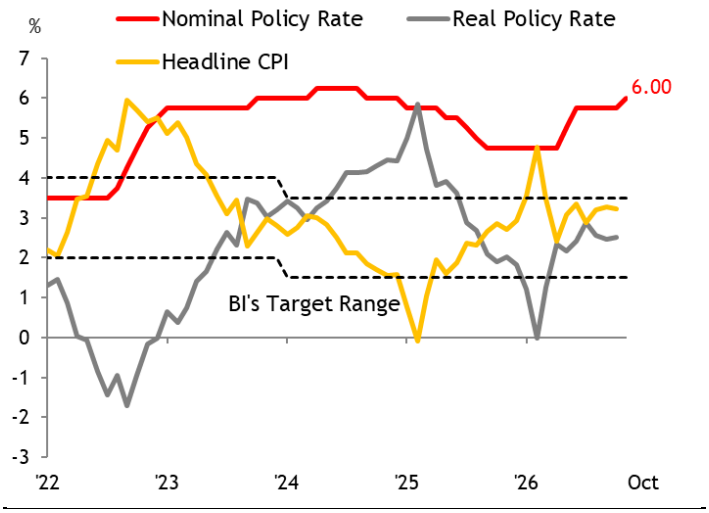

However, the leeway for intervention and non-policy rate tools is nonetheless becoming narrowing, given the dwindling net reserve position (US$113.5bn as of Sep). Net reserves (net of forward positions) are at their lowest since Dec 2018.

It could thus be challenging for BI to avoid further monetary policy tightening in an environment with more Fed rate hikes and pressures from a potential MSCI stock market downgrade. BI's forecast for the funds rate is +25bps in December and no further tightening in 2027, which is relatively optimistic compared to Maybank (+50bps in Dec 2026 – 2027) and market expectations of 2 to 3 hikes.

Post-BI decision, the USDIDR strengthened slightly to 18,232 from its peak of 18,273 prior. The 10Y GB yield was up by about +10bps to 7.7%.

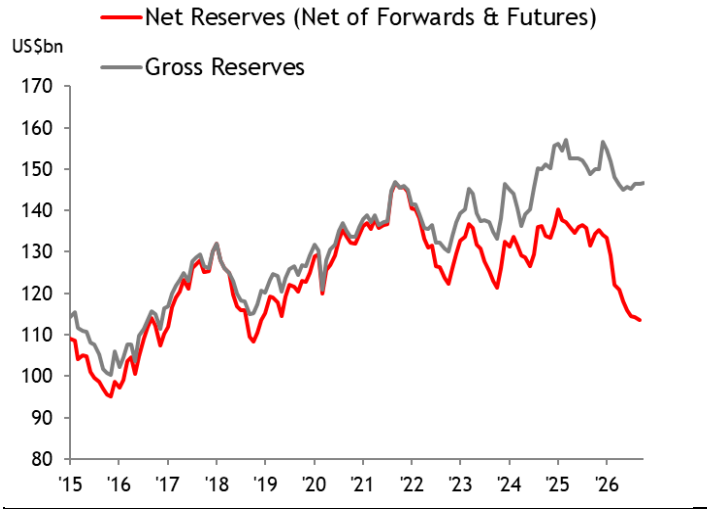

Macroprudential liquidity incentives and the 200bps RRR cut will balance out BI's monetary tightening, shoring up credit growth and supporting domestic demand. We reiterate our full-year GDP growth forecast at +5.2% in 2027 vs. +5.4% in 2026 (see Indonesia Economics - 3Q Growth Accelerates, 5 Nov 2026).
